Through these relationships, I hope to develop a deeper familiarity between cultures, between people, and between governments. I want this trip to be the first of many meaningful and extended visits to the Japanese archipelago. My dream is to work in East Asian-US relations, and this trip is essential to making my dream a reality. By meeting all sorts of people and developing an expanse of knowledge and relationships, I can better understand what the US wants from Japan, and what Japan wants from the US. The more people I meet, and the more experiences I have, the better I can serve these two nations. I want my face to become synonymous with American friendship and familiarity.
